

Army of Zero

Army of Zero, from Point Zero Games, is a card and dice game in which two players pit their team of warriors against each other. Players use their judgement to pick the right character to use at the right time, and second-guess their opponent to choose when to attack and when to defend. The game is designed to be quick and easy to both learn and play, encouraging children and their parents to play together.

But Army of Zero also holds a secret. The game's unusual feature is that the deck of eighty-four character cards hides a series of puzzles. The person who submits the best solution before the closing date will win a cash prize. The puzzles are aimed at older children and adults, making the product one that appeals to a wide range of consumers.

The game will be supported by a community-based web site, encouraging players to become engaged with the game characters and to use their creativity to contribute to the background of the game.

Army of Zero was launched at the London Toy Fair in January 2009.
