

New from Bézier Games

Rapscallion

This is a neat bidding card game. It's designed by Ted Alspach and thus has some really good-looking artwork. Players use their hand of bidding cards to acquire playing cards – of unconventional suits – from the selection available. Apart from cards with a numerical value, players also have 'Rapscallion' cards. Playing a Rapscallion wins the auction outright – unless more than one is played.

Players then use playing cards to bid for additional bidding cards, gradually increasing their hand. At the end of the round, players score points for the Poker hands they can make from the playing cards they've collected. There are some bonus points available as well. The game ends when anyone reaches 100 points and the player with the most points wins.
